

Conventional Learning vs E-Learning

Conventional learning and E-learning are two different platforms for gaining knowledge, each has its individual pros and cons.

Conventional Learning or Traditional Learning:

Conventional learning mostly aims at classroom education. It is constrained to a certain time limit and to a location. Regular in location classes help them interact with other people of their own age, be better disciplined, follow a consistent schedule, and improve their physical fitness and mental alertness. Sometimes books and classroom notes are particularly useful for studying and taking examinations more authentically. The doubts of the students can be clarified on face to face by experienced teachers. Through conventional learning pupil can find it more helpful to learn than when using general online notes and suggestions available on the internet.

Coming to the constraints of conventional learning, cost is major factor because providing classroom education requires more infrastructure, manpower, building, electricity, books etc. One must pay an enormous amount even to get basic education.

E-Learning:

The present-day scenario requires E-learning for all the people to develop, train their skills. E-learning is also a helpful way for organizational training to improve productivity. E-learning is accessible any time, any place. E-learning requires no physical presence of a teacher for all times. Learners can learn by themselves (self-learning). E-learning is possible to train global learners. It is feasible to take the course numerous times.

For E-learning, one will not have to pay beyond one's ability, it is affordable. In fact, one can get the best E-learning education without hurting one's budget. Still E-learning is not much acceptable to the people with conventional mode.

There are positive and negative aspects of conventional learning and e-learning. Before choosing any of these, first one will have to understand one's requirements and abilities. Those people who are prepared to spend more and want to join a typical college to have unique experience and disciplined life, then they can consider conventional learning. With a restricted budget and the desire of learning in flexible time, one should go with the e-learning. One should just need to choose the right course.
